MARINE

IMO Certification for KOEMMERLING Marine products

In the ship building industry, the selection of the right adhesive presents a particular challenge to the designer as well as to the end user. The critical issue of fire protection demands that the adhesives used have to meet the most stringent requirements.

Fire protection is of crucial importance in the ship building industry. In contrast to structures on land, vessels are all alone in the event of a fire, therefore the materials used in their construction have to meet the highest standards and are regulated by the International Maritime Organisation (IMO). All materials are subjected to a test for flame retardant properties and only those products which pass this test are approved for use in the ship building industry.

KOEMMERLING's 1 part polyurethane products Körapur 925 Marine, Körapur 928 Marine, Körapur 928 FC, Körapur 940 Marine and Körapur 940 FC Marine have successfully passed this challenging test and are approved to carry the wheelmark logo.

KOEMMERLING have also achieved success with their 2 part polyurethane products and have gained IMO approval for Körapur 666, Körapur 672 and Körapur 840.

The range of IMO approved adhesives is completed by the 1 part hybrid polymer Körapop 970 Marine for deck caulking.

KOEMMERLING CHEMISCHE FABRIK GMBH is therefore qualified as a reliable supplier to the ship and boat building industry and provides high quality products, which are approved to the highest standards. Koemmerling offers adhesives and sealants for various applications such as sealing, elastic bonding, deck caulking, manufacture of sandwich panels and insulation.
